(No. 1207.) BUENOS AYRES, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1849. [Established in 1826.]

BUENOS AYRES.

The following is the conclusion of the debate in the House of Lords, on the 10th of July, of which we have already given some account.

The Earl of HARROWBY felt it necessary to make a few observations on the speech which had just been delivered by the noble baron. He (the Earl of Harrowby) contended that the armistice which Lord Howden proposed, after breaking off the negotiation with Buenos Ayres, had been accepted by Oribe, and had been rejected by Ribeira. Oribe at first made considerable objection to it, but afterwards accepted it, after making in it a fatal alteration, to which his lordship immediately acceded, and which induced Ribeira immediately to reject it. It was proposed that the town of Montevideo should be open to the country; but upon Oribe's object ng to that condition it was withdrawn. The condition was so modified by the besieging General as to be fatal to the besieged town; for there was not to be that free intercourse between the town and the circumjacent country which was necessary to the provisioning of the town. Now, if that were so, the armistice which Lord Howden proposed was not acceded to by Oribe. He (Earl of Harrowby) maintained that the reverse was the case; and yet, upon the armistice not being acceded to, his lordship had immediately sailed away without any notice to the Government at Montevideo. The noble baron said that affairs at Montevideo were guided by a set of scamp gers. Who were the parties whom he thus denounced? British merchants. It was rather hard to tax those persons as buccaneers who had made the loan; not for their own profit, but because they could not help it. The noble baron had also spoken strongly on another point and that was that the independence of Montevideo had not been guaranteed by England. Now, he admitted that there was no such guarantee; but there was everything which just fell short of it.

The Earl of ABERDEEN wished to make a very few observations upon the state of the question as it existed at present, without going back to former negotiations. Perhaps not unnaturally, the noble lord opposite had wished to enter into a statement of the cause of the failure of his negotiation, but they must recollect that others had failed before him, and had failed since, employed in the same manner. Whether we were now to arrive at a successful termination or not remained to be seen. He was most happy to hear that the noble marquis felt himself justified in expressing himself with the confidence he had done on this subject. At the present time, he (Lord Aberdeen) agreed very much with the noble lord who spoke last, that the probability of success depended very much upon whether the questions to be resolved related to anything that was to take place between the country and France, or to anything still to take place between this country and Buenos Ayres. If the project of the settlement which had been sent to the country required to be disapproved by England and France with a view to coming to an agreement, he felt confident, at least very sanguine, that such would be the case; and the noble marquis might be well founded in augering such a result. But if, after England and France had come to such an agreement, that proposal was to be sent back to Buenos Ayres, he confessed his expectations would fall very much short of what he could wish. The whole matter, as far as the interest of this country was in question, resolved itself into the independence of the Oriental Republic being secured; and, if that were the only object, whether General Oribe, or General Ribeira, or General Garibaldi, if the noble lord behind him liked it (a laugh) were in possession, was a matter of perfect indifference. He revised the independence of that state was secured. Now, the noble marquis said that the foundation, the basis, and indeed the substance of the settlement which he expected to take place was that which he (Lord Aberdeen) sent out in May, 1848, which was commonly called the Hood treaty. To any modifications of that he did not object the least in the world, provided the substance of that proposition was maintained; and in proportion as they adhered to that proposition, he ventured to say they would adhere to the principles of justice. But those modifications might alter the character of the proceeding; for instance, he said the independence of the Oriental state was all they wished, but if Governor Rosas should think fit, instead of according to the Hood basis and withdrawing his army from the Oriental State, and should wish his army to remain in possession of it, he (Lord Aberdeen) should not call that a modification but the entire destruction of that agreement; and he, therefore, could only hope that Her Majesty's Government would take care that in the modifications which they assented to they should go no further than that which was necessary to maintain the independent existence of the Oriental State. The noble lord opposite had explained, and most truly, that the country was not bound to guarantees the independence of Montevideo. Certainly not, but the creation of that state took place principally in addition of this country. He (Lord Aberdeen) was at the Foreign-office in 1848 when that state was created, and he knew that Lord Hood acted on and in his instructions upon that occasion. No doubt there was no formal guarantee, but that would give an interest in the future independence of that state, and from recent transactions we were bound in honor and common justice to see that that state did remain independent. (Hear.) That was all he had to express a wish about, and if when the noble marquis announced the settlement of this question he should also announce that that state remained independent, he [Lord Aberdeen] should think that the Hood basis had been quite sufficiently fulfilled.

Lord BEAUMONT wished to explain an expression which he had used on a former occasion, and which he understood had given pain elsewhere, and to which the noble lord on the cross-benches had that evening alluded. Certainly, on a former occasion, in speaking of the question of the Custom-house at Montevideo, he did describe the persons who had raised that loan as mere jobbers. He described them in a somewhat similar tone to that used by his noble friend that evening. Since then he had the opportunity of ascertaining who those gentlemen were; he had communicated with some of them, and he now felt satisfied that the persons who came forward were all respectable firms, and that their object was not so much their own pecuniary interest with regard to the Custom house as to keep the Montevidean Government going, not so much from an extreme over-patriotic love of the Government,—and he saw no reason for any,—but that, whilst it was kept going, they might get in their outstanding debts. What he wished to say, therefore, was, that he believed in what they had done they had done nothing discreditable to themselves, and that they were most respectable and honorable men. He hoped that this was the last time the subject would come before their lordships. For one of a better word he must characterize the commencement of those proceedings as extremely disgraceful. The commencement was not honourable to us, and the negotiations had been marked by an unexampled want of success.

The subject then dropped.

The report we give is that of the Times, and with reference thereto the two following communications have appeared in the same paper:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Allow me, for the sake of my credit with that very small number of your readers who take an interest in the affairs of the River Plate, to correct an error in the report of my observations on that subject in the House of Lords last night. I am made to place Ribeira in the government of Monte Video while Lord Howden was negotiating an armistice between that city and General Oribe. I never mentioned his name. He had long disappeared from the stage. I spoke simply of the Government of the town without mentioning any name.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
HARROWBY.

Grosvenor-square, July 11.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Lord Howden is reported, in your paper of the 11th inst., to have stated to the House of Lords, that Mr. Hood was not of sufficient station, nor sufficient professional calibre, to make head against the two Plenipotentiaries of France and England who were both diametrically opposed to his views," &c.

I attributed this singular misrepresentation (as also, possibly, others with which Lord Howden's speech abounded) of my conduct to an error of the reporter, arising from the known difficulty of correctly hearing in the House of Lords. As above a week has elapsed since I read the report, and it remains uncorrected, I must now conclude that the public accusation is deliberately brought by Lord Howden against his predecessor in the River Plate.

If so, he has not hesitated to accuse a public servant, of upwards of 30 years' standing in diplomacy, of having opposed the confidential agent of his own Government; and, of course, the instructions of which that agent was bearer.

On the animus or taste of this attack it is needless to remark. The accusation was made in a place where I could have no opportunity of repelling it; and, as it did not meet my eye until some days after it was reported, owing to my absence from London, it remains for me now to request the publication of this my direct and unqualified contradiction of the assertion, that I opposed Mr. Hood, or acted contrary to the instructions of which he was the bearer.

There is not a shadow of foundation for the statement reported to have been made by Lord Howden respecting my conduct to Mr. Hood.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
W. GORE OUSELEY.

Late Her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to the States of La Plata.

4, Spring-gardens, July 20.

The report of the debate as published by the Times is certainly very incorrect, and perhaps nowhere more so than in Lord Howden's speech. As far as Mr. Ouseley is concerned, however, his lordship is not represented to have said anything in which he is not borne out by the fact, and it required no ordinary degree of hardihood in Baron Deffaudis' colleague to contradict what is a matter of notoriety to the entire populations of Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. His unwearied exertions to defeat the object of Mr Hood's mission, without scrupling at the means employed to carry a point pre-determined at all hazards in the councils of the two plenipotentiaries, form one of the most disgraceful episodes of the Intervention. When Mr. Ouseley speaks of his 30 years' standing in diplomacy, he doubtless has in view to excite sympathy with his misfortune in being shelved after so long a period of service. But, admitting the alleged fact, it only goes to prove—what nobody who has seen his diplomatic abilities displayed in the River Plate will be at all disposed to call in question—that in embracing the diplomatic career he sadly mistook his vocation.

The debate in the Lords on the 10th of July is undoubtedly the most interesting that has taken place in either house, during the session, on the affairs of the River Plate. Imperfect as is the report of what fell from the Marquis of Lansdowne, we gather from it that the delay in the action of H. M's. government on the convention referred to it, proceeds solely from the commendable desire of procuring the concurrence of the French government, i. e. the simultaneous ratification of the two separate conventions, and that in the event of that concurrence being withheld it will at once act independently in the matter. Lord Howden's vindication of the course he pursued in raising the blockade is unanswerable. It is besides not a little to the credit of his lordship's foresight that he predicted before leaving home the failure of the negotiation on the very point on which it was actually broken off; and it is also honourable to the sense of justice by which he was actuated that he was disposed to take upon himself the responsibility of acceding to the reasonable demands of the Argentine government in regard to the navigation of the rivers, if he could induce his colleague to acquiesce. His lordship's frank disavowal of any guarantee whatever on the part of England of the independence of the Oriental State was quite opportune, and must set that question effectually at rest, whilst it affords fresh evidence of the false and iniquitous pretences upon which the intervention was originally undertaken. Against the propensity which has been so much indulged of intermeddling in the internal affairs of the South American republics Lord Howden raises a warning voice, which it is to be hoped, in the interest of peace and commerce as well as of humanity, will not be disregarded. In one topic of his speech we think his lordship is misreported. He is represented as having placed the legality of the government of President Oribe and that of the Montevideon intrusive authority on the same footing. Now, such an assumption is utterly irreconcilable with his lordship's previous statements, and equally at variance with fact. General Oribe did not "reject" or voluntarily resign the title of President; he was forced to relinquish it by the open alliance of the French with the rebels, and in doing so he addressed to the Legislative Assembly a solemn protest against the violence of which he was the victim. There is another point on which the Gaceta is of opinion that his lordship is also at fault, but in this our contemporary labours under a misapprehension. In alluding to the existence of "a general feeling" against General Rosas Lord Howden made no reference at all to this country, but to England merely, where it is but too true that the constant operation of an organised system of defamation has succeeded in making an impression on the public mind. That this view is correct will be readily seen by referring to the context. The Earl of Harrowby's speech is only remarkable for his cavilling at the reasons which prompted Lord Howden to raise the blockade. Nothing less was to be expected from the noble apologist of the Montevideo Shylocks; and it is not a little to be wondered at that he should have made the admission that a regular war was party to the guarantee of the Oriental independence. This was also acknowledged by the Earl of Aberdeen, notwithstanding that the existence of such guarantee was invoked by Mr. Ouseley under his lordship's instructions as the chief justification of the interference of Great Britain! But the noble ex-minister now shifts his ground, and argues that the absence of a formal guarantee is the very reason why England should evince an interest in the Oriental State!! He also affects, though with rather unbecoming levity, the greatest indifference as to who fills the presidential chair, when it was to his and his friend M. Guizot's obstinancy in not allowing the rightful incumbent to occupy it that we are indebted for all the mischief which ensued. This shuffling is of a piece with his lordship's procedure throughout the question while he was in office. Lord Beaumont's prof-sed atonement to the parties whom so justly stigmatised before as lamplobbers contains a good deal of sly wit. When, after describing their conduct in keeping alive the flames of war on the plea of gaining time to get in their outstanding debts, he characterises them as "most respectable and honourable men," he certainly has Shakspeare in his mind's eye. Marc Antony, while inveighing against the atrocity of Cæsar's murder, is exceedingly careful, it will be remembered, to disclaim the least intention of criminating its perpetrators. The reason is a forcible one—

For Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all; all honourable men.

Don Antonio Antonio Ferreyra Martins has been appointed Consul of the Argentine Confederation at the Cape Verd Islands.

On the 5th inst. H. B. M's. sloop of war Tweed, steamer Harpy and schooner Spider displayed the national flag at the fore during the day, the Tweed firing a salute of 21 guns at noon, in honor of the anniversary of the restoration of legal order in 1820.

On the 6th, after the embarkation of Commodore Sir Thomas Herbert, the Tweed fired a farewell salute of 21 guns, which was returned by the Battery Liberiad.

Letters from Corrientes of the 20th ult. state that the advanced guard of the forces sent into Misiones by Governor Lopez of Paraguay, was commanded by an European adventur r calling himself Francis Wisner de Morgenstein, and the main body by young Lopez, the Governor's son. Wisner appears to have assumed a little too much for his station, having collected in his camp a number of Correntino rebel officers from Rio Grande, with whom he undertook to concoct schemes of rather serious political importance. This conduct is said to have greatly offended, if not alarmed, Signor Lopez, whose antipathy to, or jealousy of, the emigrants is proverbial. The consequence was, it is affirmed, that Wisner was immediately shot, and that all the Argentine malcontents he had assembled about him were forthwith ordered to decamp. Wisner's successor in the command is stated to be a Paraguayan officer of the name of Ojeda.

The following is from the Liverpool Mail of August 11—

The Daily News correspondent writes that a courier from Galatz brought the following news, which, however, requires confirmation:—

"The Austrian and Russian army, 60,000 strong, after occupying Hermanstadt and Cronstadt, had now small places, advanced to Sarcani. Bem collected 40,000 men, and charged against them. The battle ended in a complete defeat of the Imperialists. They fled precipitately, leaving 10,000 dead and wounded nearly all their artillery, and 8,000 prisoners, among whom is General Anlenburg. Bem then took possession of Hermanstadt and Constadt. In Gallicia, Dembinski is reported to have gained a victory, and taken General Preyzag prisoner."

IRISH INFIRMARY.

The Committee of the Irish Immigrant Infirmary beg leave to lay the following statement before the Subscribers, and they trust that the relief afforded to an infirmary will be an object eminently to those who have not hitherto contributed to support so valuable an institution.

The Infirmary was established for the purpose of receiving sick immigrants, whether men, women or children, or any poor family from the country, who might be unable to procure medical assistance.

The Committee have had built three additional rooms for the accommodation of female patients; these buildings together with the expenses incurred for beds and furniture of all kinds suitable to such an institution, have naturally absorbed a good deal of money. But the strictest economy has been adopted as far as circumstances would permit.

In consequence of the large number of immigrants that landed here in the month of July the Committee were obliged to ask donations from the English and American residents of this city, and the handsome and generous manner in which they met that call deserves the warmest gratitude of the Committee.

Buenos Aires, Sept. 30, 1849.

The medical report of the Irish Infirmary for the last year ending the 30th of September, and which I now have the honor to lay before the Subscribers is as follows—

The total number of patients admitted was 158; of these 116 were men, 26 women and 16 children. The diseases under which they laboured were as follows—fevers 46, rheumatism 6, wounds 7, diseases of the lungs 8, liver 2, heart 2, eyes 4, fractures 4, scurvy 4, white swelling 2, lumbago 6, scrofula 2, fever and ague 1, inflammation of bowels and stomach 23, burns 3, dysentery 7, epilepsy 1, chlorosis 1, cerebral affections 9, hypochondriasis 2, erysipelas 1, skin and other specific diseases 7, phlegmon , pustula maligna 1, dyspepsia 6, colic 1, contusions 2. 138 were discharged cured, 15 died, and 5 remain in the Infirmary; out door relief was also afforded to 17 persons at different periods, having had no accommodation in the Infirmary. Of the surgical cases there were a few of importance, two of the fractures were of a serious nature—one a compound fracture of the lower jaw, another of both bones of the fore arm with laceration of the soft parts and division of the principle blood vessels from a gun shot wound; both terminated favourably. A third, who had a chronic disease of the leg and ankle joint of many years standing, submitted to amputation of the limb and is now in the enjoyment of good health.

The establishment has conferred incalculable benefit on the new immigrants who have arrived during the past year, as also on several of our countrymen who came in sick from the country.

I beg to return my warmest thanks to Doctor Browne for his invaluable services and punctual attendance at all times when invited, as also to Doctors Dick, Lepper and Almeyra, who have on several occasions rendered important services.

CORNELIUS DONOVAN, M.D.

Boxes for Tallow.

Of the best description, may be had at reasonable prices at No. 104 Calle de Suipacha. The boards whereof the boxes are made being sawn by machinery have the advantage, from the undeviating precision in the size of the respective parts, and perfect squareness and smoothness at the ends, of adhering more closely at the joints than those generally in use, thus rendering the box undoubtedly stronger and the joints closer. They may be also had loose, which will facilitate the conveyance to a distance and will be a saving to the purchaser, as any lad can nail them together. They can be made any size to suit the purchaser.

FOR SALE,

The whole, or any part, of a very extensive and choice selected Library, embracing almost every branch of literature—also a variety of illustrated works and gems of art—the highest order for the drawing room table—the whole quite new and in splendid extra gilt bindings.
